Carving the Future

Last month, Rebekah taught several of the kids to carve roses out of strawberries. Some of the kids wanted to see if this technique could also be used on grapes. Alejandro thought that carving fruit for banquets and events like weddings would be a cool job in the future. Jasmine and Lily decided that building with the fruit was more fun. "Look at my Hula Girl!" exclaimed Jasmine. Jimmy said, "My hands are sooo cold, but carving ice would be more difficult." Rebekah explained "At least you could use gloves to keep your hands warm if you were carving ice."

What started out as a simple breakfast activity before school turned into a wonderful experience for the kids to build, explore, create, and even consider options they were not previously aware of for the future.
