Learning at Hubert H. Humphrey

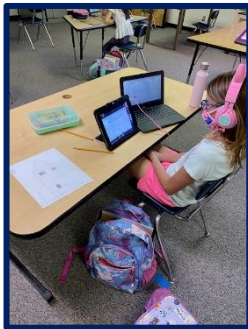

We wanted to give families a closer look at what the mornings look like during remote learning. Kids are busy studying and are on their devices doing anything they can to get the Wi-Fi to work! It's been a challenge, but it is so nice to walk around and see that even with all of the stressors, we are all in good spirits.

Some of the kids focus more if they have their meal next to them. Here is Daivah diligently working before her break.

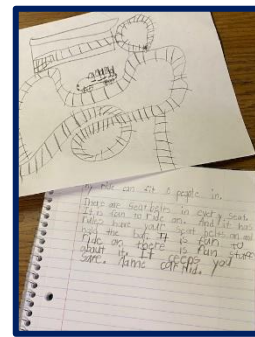

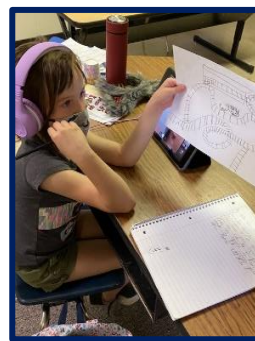

Some of the kids are using more than one device to juggle the connectivity glitches. They really are amazing when it comes to going from one to the other. The staff help out as much as possible too.

They have dividers that they use for privacy while they're working and decorate their areas to personalize their space.

Some of the assignments are creative, too. Below, we have some drawings that they have worked very hard on.

Secret language

Beau and Hunter came up with a pretty creative way to communicate during our quiet school time. They were inspired by wanting to talk to each other, but not wanting to disturb the others who were on their class meetings. They created hand and body signals that they each understand.

“We made them so that we could talk to each other from a distance instead of having to get close to each other or be loud to talk to each other.”
