STEAM Labs! – Potato Launchers

In this exciting STEAM activity, the kids explored science with a hilarious twist—launching potatoes at school! Using specially made launchers, the kids learned all about air pressure, force, and trajectory while safely launching spuds across the parking lot. It was the perfect combo of hands-on learning and high-flying fun. The best part? Seeing the kids' faces light up as their potatoes soared through the air! Science has never been so spud-tacular!

Marble Mazes!

This week, our young engineers took on the challenge of building marble mazes - and not just any mazes. The goal? Make them as big and complicated as possible! The kids started with individual creations but quickly realized that by combining their pieces, they could build something even more exciting. From there, it turned into a collaborative mega-maze project, full of twists, turns, and nonstop fun. They experimented with different paths, heights, and angles—turning trial and error into creativity and teamwork. The end results? One giant maze and a whole lot of joy!

Superhero Lab!

This week we had an absolute blast designing our own superhero capes! Each child let their creativity soar, using fabric markers, stickers, and felt shapes to bring their unique superpowers to life. This activity was filled with laughter, color, and imagination as everyone proudly modeled their creations and struck their best superhero poses. It was a perfect mix of art, self-expression, and pure joy!

Quotes:

Johanna: My superpower is kindness!

Michelle: Now I can fly!

Mayzie: let's play superhero's outside!

Marilou: I want to have hearts all over my cape!
