Fairy Magical: We made an Australian treat called Fairy Bread, which is a birthday treat in both Australia and New Zealand. The history is mixed, some saying it used to be served to children in the sanatorium where they were not allowed sweets like cake, while others say it came from a lack of access to cake baking materials. Either way, the kids were confused. "Are we gonna toast the bread?" asked Andre. "It's just bread, sprinkles and butter?! How is that good?" questioned Addi. The results were clean plates. "It's sweet and soft and crunchy," said Aspen. This was certainly a treat that caught our little group by surprise.

Change of Pace: We do a lot of high energy things at CC. We play on scooters, make swords, run in the rain, and play hide and seek inside. Sometimes we realize it's okay to slow down. We got a lovely donation of air dry clay and spent a part of our afternoon making clay creatures. I pulled out some beads and we made long bead snakes. Suddenly, it was very quiet at our creative tables. Everyone focusing and making detailed little creations. Sometimes it's good to just stop and take your time to make something creative on your own while surrounded by people doing the same at a shared table.

Mud Play: An Interview

On the latest rainy day, we went outside to dig in the mud of the garden. I asked some questions while we played.

What is the focus right now?

Andre: Making a river. We are digging it in the dirt so the water goes somewhere.

Has it been easy or hard so far?

Emerson: We have to work fast because the water comes when it wants with the rain.

Has anyone noticed anything cool to them while building this?

Addi: The rapids! If you put rocks close together the running water cleans the rocks and makes the water run faster.

Andre: Making dams! If we want the water to stop so we can dig, we use rocks, plants, and mud to hold back the water. It's cool to see!
