Battle of Balance

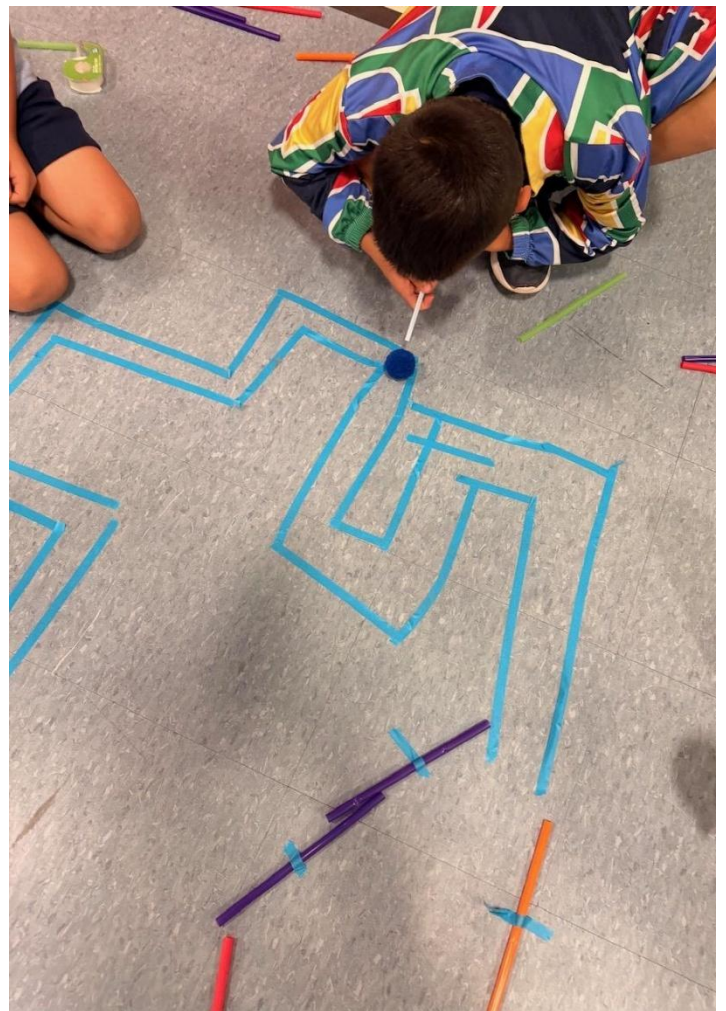

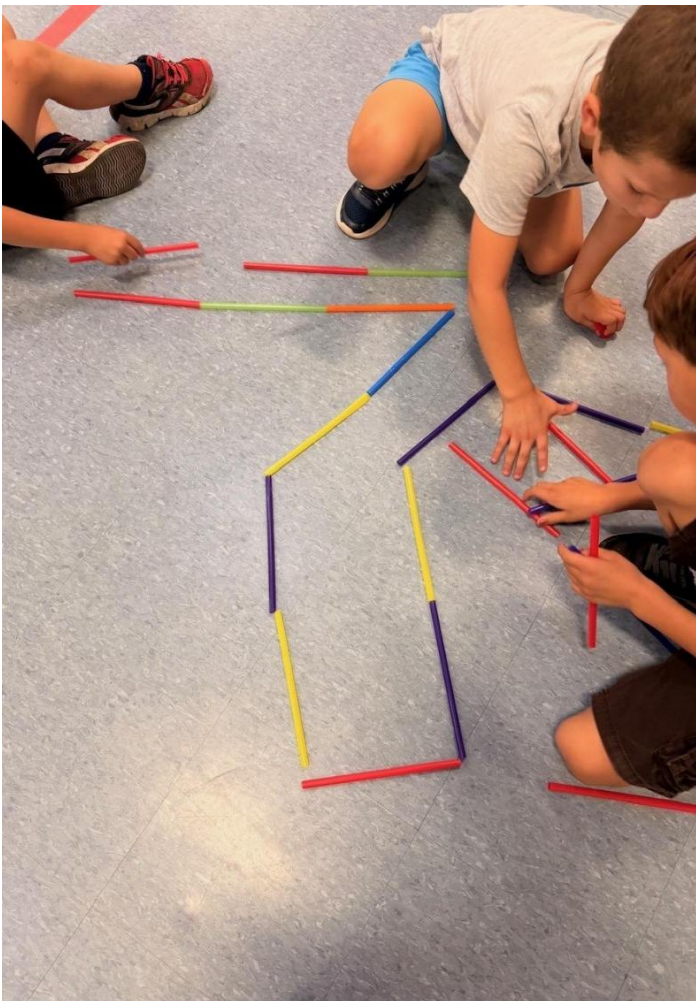

At Children's Choice we are always looking for new ways to add our own spin on games and activities to kick them up a notch. In this activity the kids were challenged to play rock paper scissors but if you lost you had to take a step back and play another round. The more rounds you lost the more steps you had to take back until you are battling to win the round and to keep your balance.

The kids had a great time battling each other until there was one kid left standing, literally. It was a challenge for them to play the game to win and keep their balance at the same time. Some kids were so determined to stay upright they were inches away from the ground and still playing. It was a competitive game, but it was also hilarious looking around at the stance of everyone and the faces they would make when they would almost lost their balance.

Ah-MAZE-ing Mazes

In this activity the kids were separated into two teams and challenged to make a giant straw maze for the other team to solve. Using different kinds of straws, the kids got to work examining which straw would work the best, what kind of pattern they wanted to make and how complicated they wanted to make their maze. It required a good amount of teamwork and communication for each team to complete their mazes. After both teams finished, they had to try each other's mazes, solving them by blowing a pom pom through them. Whether the kids were trying to get through the maze fast or without mistakes they had an ah-maze-ing time.

Pickle Me This

In this activity we learned how to pickle cucumbers. As we were going about this project we talked about the word pickle being a verb and a noun. Laikyn asked, “What do you mean you can pickle a watermelon? Would it taste like a pickle?” As we continued with pickling cucumbers, we planned to experiment with what we could pickle in the future. We put our cucumbers in a jar with salt, sugar, garlic, spices and some red pepper flakes. After we added all our ingredients, we made a brine of vinegar and water to carefully pour in our jars. We tried our pickles after two days and they were too salty. We went back to our recipe and realized we read it wrong but the kids were more than happy to try again.
